ABSTRACT

A questionnaire was designed to determine parent perceptions of and degree of satisfaction with the services provided by Philadelphia's Prescriptive Educational Approach to Children with Handicaps (Project PEACH). Project PEACH provided diagnostic, referral, and prescriptive educational services for preschool children. Five areas were covered by the questionnaire: testing and evaluation; Individualized Education Program (IEP) and Multidisciplinary Team (MDT) process; services provided; personal involvement of parents; and children's progress. Of the respondents, three-quarters were satisfied with the testing and evaluation; two-thirds were satisfied with the IEPs; 90 percent were pleased with the services provided; two-thirds were able to observe teachers working with their children; and 56 percent were satisfied with their children's progress. The skill areas in which parents believed their children showed improvement were: language; self-help; social; attentiveness; gross motor; and fine motor. (The questionnaire and responses are appended). (MH)

Abstract

A questionnaire was designed to determine parent perception of and degree of satisfaction with, the services provided by the PEACH project. A total of 350 questionnaires were mailed to parents during the summer of 1978 and 120 (34%) responses were received. This was not considered sufficient to generalize to the total population, but it was considered as being useful in identifying possible problem areas.

Conclusions based on responses in each of the five areas covered by the questionnaire were:

Testing and Evaluation

Parents with children in a PEACH instructional program were generally satisfied with the special tests provided by the staff and with the Program Planning Conference.

IEP and MDT Process

Parents were generally satisfied with the IEP written for their children and with recommendations for student placement. A quarter of the respondents were dissatisfied with the actual process of getting the child into a program. The latter were dissatisfied with the amount of time that it took from the initial call to finally being serviced.

Services Provided

Nearly all parents with children enrolled in the Speech, Language and Hearing Clinics were generally satisfied or very satisfied with the program provided to children and to parents and believed that the objectives listed in the IEP had been attained.

Personal Involvement of Parents

Parents who observed the teacher working with their children in the classroom generally felt that they learned a great deal about how to continue such work at home. Half of the parents attended a parent group meeting, workshop or talk sponsored by Project PEACH and believed such meetings to be somewhat or very helpful.

Child's Progress

One half of the parents felt either satisfied or very satisfied with the progress made by their children. They indicated that the greatest amount of improvement was in the language skills area.

Parent Satisfaction Survey

The PEACH Project provided diagnostic, referral, and prescriptive educational services for preschool children (between 3 and 4.7 years). Children were evaluated by a multidisciplinary team composed of psychological and educational specialists. After verification of a handicapping condition, an Individualized Education Program (IEP) was written that included a developmental education plan with specific goals and objectives for the child and the placement and services to be provided. Service was then provided either by referral to an outside agency or, if no such service was available, by PEACH units directly.

The purpose of this survey was to determine parent perception of services provided, and the degree of parent satisfaction with those services. In the letter to respondents, parents were informed that "the summarized group data will be presented to the staff so that they may make plans to improve the program."

While it is recognized that this response rate is not sufficient to generalize to the total population (especially since there is no way of knowing how those who chose to respond differed from those who did not), responses did, however, constitute a substantial number of children served (34% of the sample and 13% of the total population), and, as such, would be of some importance to program personnel in identifying possible problem areas. It is in that spirit that this report has been prepared.

Parents were asked to respond anonymously to 26 items on a four page questionnaire. Only 6 forms out of 120 (5%) responses were discarded because they were either improperly completed or were returned blank. Forty-five parents wrote unsolicited comments to the various items and 5 parents wrote unsolicited letters.

Data Analysis

The actual survey and the number of parents who responded to each of the multiple choice selections for each question are found in Appendix B. The responses were grouped under the following content areas:

- Testing and Evaluation
- IEP and MDT Process
- Services Provided
- Parent Involvement
- Child's Progress
- Additional Parent Comments

The evaluator was able to determine from the responses which of the following PEACH services the respondent's child had received:

1. The child had been placed in a speech program
2. The child had been placed in a Family Service program as part of the full service PEACH component
3. The child was placed in both programs
4. The child had been tested but not yet placed in any program

Results

Over a quarter of the respondents indicated that their children had been tested and had not yet been placed. Two-fifths of them had children placed in the Speech unit and nearly a third had children either in the PEACH Family Services Program or in both programs.

Testing and Evaluation

Three quarters of the parents were either satisfied or very satisfied with the special tests provided by the staff and with the meeting to discuss the results of the tests (i.e., at the Program Planning Conference). Over half of the respondents expressed such feelings about the program received at one of 5 diagnostic and evaluation centers wherein the child was placed for a two week period for observation and evaluation. Two-fifths of the respondents did not have their children attend the latter program and just checked off the box "doesn't apply" for this question.

IEP and MDT Process

Two-thirds of the parents responded that they were either very satisfied or satisfied with the IEP written for their children and 80% were satisfied with the suggestions made about where and how their child could be helped. Approximately 25% of the respondents were dissatisfied or very dissatisfied with the process of getting the child into a program. They were similarly unhappy with the amount of time that it took from the first call to finally getting service for the child, and with communication between project people and the parent.

Services Provided

Approximately 60% of the parents felt that the special services and programs promised in the IEP had either been fully or partially provided, and that either all or some of the objectives listed in the IEP had been attained. Nearly 90% of the parents whose children were receiving services at one of the five Speech/Language and Hearing Clinics were either satisfied or very satisfied with the program. Two-thirds of the parents with children attending one of the five Family Service Centers expressed such satisfaction. Nearly three-quarters of the parents expressed feelings of satisfaction with the services provided to the parent.

Parental Involvement

Two-thirds of the parents noted that they watched the teacher work with their children in the classroom. Only 28% watched frequently and 25%, occasionally. Two-fifths believed that they learned a great deal about how to help their children at home as a result of these visits. Thirteen percent of the parents reported that the teacher rarely or never met with them to make suggestions to help their children. Two-thirds noted that the teachers met either often or occasionally to make such suggestions. Nearly 70% of the parents noted that other PEACH staff made such suggestions either during a home visit, during conferences to discuss test results, or over the phone. Approximately three-quarters felt comfortable or very comfortable in talking with the teacher.

About half of the parents attended a parent group meeting, a workshop, or a talk sponsored by the PEACH project. They felt that such meetings/workshops/talks were either somewhat or very helpful. Approximately 12% felt that though there was some opportunity for parents to participate in the program, it was not enough. However, 46% felt that the opportunities were sufficient. The remainder either responded with "don't know" or did not respond.

Child's Progress

Over half of the parents (56%) felt that they were satisfied or very satisfied with the progress their children were making in the program. Approximately 10% were dissatisfied or very dissatisfied with such progress. The remainder either didn't know or did not respond.

Parents selected the following areas most frequently as the areas in which their children showed improvement since receiving treatment:

- language skills (60% of the respondents)
- self-help skills (44%)
- social skills (40%)
- pay attention (39%)
- gross motor skills (39%)
- fine motor skills (31%)

Approximately 25% of the parents reported improvements in problem solving and a decrease in the incidence of tantrums, crying, hitting and disobeying.

Additional Parent Comments

Fifty of the 120 parents wrote comments, letters and notes expressing their feelings about various facets of the PEACH project. Such comments can be summarized as follows: Ten parents wrote that they were very satisfied with the services provided by the Speech, Language and Hearing Unit. They were however, very unhappy with the PEACH full service component. Six parents wrote that they could not obtain copies of evaluation and IEP reports, though they called frequently and months had passed. Eight parents were very frustrated over the evaluation procedure and the time it took to process a child via the PEACH full service component. Copies of these comments were forwarded to project administrators.

Summary

Responses from 114 parents revealed the following highlights: Nearly three-quarters were satisfied or very satisfied with the testing and evaluation services provided by PEACH services and with the PPC and IEP written for their children.

Half of the parents believed that some of the goals and objectives listed in the IEP had been attained. (Three-quarters of the respondents had a child enrolled in a PEACH program). Parents expressed extreme satisfaction with the Speech, Language and Hearing Program and in the manner the therapists communicate and interact with them.

Two-thirds of the parents noted that they watched the teacher work with their children in the classroom and received suggestions on how to deal with their children at home. Two-fifths believed that as a result of these visits and discussions with the teachers, they learned a great deal about how to deal with their children at home. Approximately three-quarters of the parents felt comfortable or very comfortable talking with the teacher about their children.

Approximately half of the parents attended a parent group meeting, a workshop or a talk sponsored by the PEACH project. Though nearly half felt that the opportunities for parents to participate in the program were sufficient, 12% felt that such opportunities were insufficient.

Over half of the parents were either satisfied or very satisfied with the progress their child was making, but 10% were either dissatisfied or very dissatisfied with the program.

Two-thirds of the parents reported that the child was better able to listen, follow directions, and speak (language skills). Two-fifths felt that their child was better able to pay attention, play or share with other children (social skills), dress, toilet, feed self, (self help skills), walk, run, balance (gross motor skills), and nearly a third noted improvement in fine motor skills, such as drawing, cutting out, doing puzzles and in cognitive skill areas as reasoning, solving problems, and thinking. A quarter reported a decrease in such negative behaviors as tantrums, crying, hitting, and disobeying. Fifteen percent reported a decrease in the frequency of their child's need to destroy things.

Approximately 25% of the parents were unhappy about the amount of time it took to obtain service for their children.

Recommendations

The purpose of this study was to enable project administrators to address themselves to such areas as may require their immediate attention. Such areas include the following: the actual process of getting a child into a program and the amount of time that it takes from the initial call to finally being serviced. The fact that a quarter of the respondents expressed dissatisfaction with the above areas should spur project administrators to determine whether such dissatisfaction stems from correctable problem areas in project implementation.

Dear Parent:

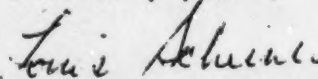

The goal of Project PEACH is to provide the best education for the children we serve. We are, therefore, interested in getting information from you about how we are meeting our goal.

Would you please complete the attached questionnaire, answering each item as freely as possible. The information provided by your answers will be carefully summarized into group data. This means that no person can be identified, and all information remains confidential. The summarized group data will be presented to the staff so that they may make plans to improve the program.

Please be careful to fill out both sides of the questionnaire. After you complete the questionnaire, please return it to me in the enclosed pre-stamped envelope by June 30, 1978.

Your feelings and opinions are very important to us and will be held confidential. Thank you for your time and cooperation.
